Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	You're very clean with your movement! Great improvement. You do a great job of being in control of your entire body. The voices could be more distinguished. Carpet muffles sound. So the knocking isn't as loud compared to a tile table. If you can perform w/o the glasses b/c they produce a glare that makes it hard for people to see your eyes.
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	It took about 15 secs before you made eye contact w/ the judges
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	Slow down some of the words. Talk to your coach about Shakespeare. When you deliver lines you have to pronounce every syllable be it messes the flow. Obv. this isn't W.S. but it helps with being clear. It's a pace thing the more I hear it. You go through sentences fast and it makes it where you can't hear it.

General Feedback:

Heres a tip: Learn your time. Time signals by nature mean a judge is occasionally glances at the top which means that's a little less attention they can give to you. Plus, if you're at 9 minutes and you have 2 minutes left of dialogue it's not like you're just going to stop. Learn your piece and what parts are at what points in time. Espicially that last minute

Reason for Decision (Why did this performance earn the rank you assigned?):

Practice like this is your talent expectations. It was a tough round. Little things separate the good and the great.

Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	You're really set to develop your characters more. They all should have different personalities, stances, everything. There sort of like diffrent sides of one person rather than diffrent entities.
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	Everything should have sound an animation. And be costinent. If you wipe the mirror in one spot that's where the mirror is established. It helps establish the scene.
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	It reminds me of a cartoon so you could really get creative with that. Good work.

General Feedback: You reminded me a lot of myself. You kind of go over the place so there's no real focal point or base for which to stay. Think of it like you're in a box and everything for the most part should be done in that spot. It's like a Jedi mind trick that forces you to get creative w/ the available space. (which works for two reasons. 1. If you're in a small space in a diffrent round 2. It cleans it up.

Reason for Decision (Why did this performance earn the rank you assigned?):
Lots of potential to do some great things with this piece.

Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	There's a lot to do with this piece regarding Characters. It's okay to look at other performances and see if there's something you'd like to incorporate into your work.
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	The popping needs work. The character change takes too much time. Remember to be in control of your entire body while performing. Don't get lazy.
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	She trips here - Take a pause. Sometimes, when there's a punch line it's a good idea to take a breath so the audience can take in the joke. I'd love for you to really show the flashbacks in a bigger sense. The clapping doesn't really do it justice that other parts of your performance warrants.

General Feedback: The natural expressions of your face are weird. It's a good weird be it you have to be a little weird and go beyond what's there. Great chance to be creative. Characters could be bigger, more profound. Glasses are complicated be they slide down at certain points so make sure if you could fix that. People can't hear what you say next bc you're funny and they laugh..

Reason for Decision (Why did this performance earn the rank you assigned?): When you get to these later rounds. The competition gets fierce. Practice like this is your level of talent expectation

Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	When you switch characters I see a shift from each one. Very well done. Maybe the block could be quicker and don't get complacent with them. Maybe facial expressions
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	Remember to be in control of your entire body. Even the parts you don't like. If it can't help you don't let it hurt you. Everything should be in control and not get large.
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	You grab the attention of the room. If anything your delivery is slower than a Natural-level HI. Might want to cut it more down a bit a minute. Too close for comfort.

General Feedback:

It's a good idea to make eye contact with everyone in the room. (Even the judges) Not that creepy stare down but it helps establish that connection that allows an audience to feel a part of the story.

Reason for Decision (Why did this performance earn the rank you assigned?):

Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	You set yourself up for success when you chose a piece that relates to you. The characters preforms bring to life are the best bc we find ways to relate and form an emotional connection.
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	Distinguish your teaser from your intro by slowing down your melting. You are a little too obviously careful w/ the moon walk. It's fine on the District level, but not a National level.
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	You're growing up, Rafael. There's a maturity there that hasn't been there. Extremely poised. You turn life events into these hilarious 10 things. You're moving along in the Intrp. Arts.

General Feedback:

The stereotypes can be played up maybe a tiny bit more. It might take it from hilarious to drop-end funny. I have this idea for the "I went to college" that involves spinning to show the complete setting and time change.

Characterization Is each character well-developed? Is each character relatable? Does a character's response seem believable given the situation being portrayed?	I wouldn't have known you were a girl if you didn't say it. Be a girl. Stand like a girl. Maybe different than a little more.
Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	The blocking is overall good and creative. It's more of a practice to perfect it. Watch yourself perform in a mirror so you can see the parts you need to crisp
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	You do a good job regarding eye contact w/ the entire audience but don't make it a point to simply avoid it with the judges.

General Feedback: As humans, we grow when we're uncomfortable. Same as a performer. It's being a little daring that lead to the best improvements to the piece. Keep that in mind. Blocking Can you tell what the performer is doing in the scene? Is it clear what character s/he is playing? Is the movement motivated?	Over use of gestures. Movement supports speech. Stop using your hands so much, it distracts from some of the jokes.
Cutting Do you understand what is happening? Is the story line easy to follow? Do the sequence of events make sense?	Basic concept. Boy wants girl. The story flows well.
